Blogs

We'll end this time with three good radio blogs. DXing et al styles itself as, "A mainly DXing blog from London and Carcassonne." DXing et al is run by M1SMH, who's been a licensed radio amateur for over 10 years and is also into the short wave listening side of things. On the listening side, his specific interests include transatlantic medium wave DXing. Therefore, at this time of year it will be worth seeing what he writes about from his two very different DXing locations in urban North West London and the rural Languedoc (near Carcassonne).

Now, we travel from the Languedoc to Lincolnshire and Skegness, where John Faulkner (a name familiar to many DXers) resides. John has plenty to keep you going through a cold dark night with DXpedition logs from around the UK, medium wave and amateur band catches. Have a look at G1VVP – Skegness DX, DXing on England's East Coast.

The SWLing Post has a nice new feature where listeners share their radio experiences. It started on October 23rd, with a piece by Alexander von Obert DL4NO in Germany.

For me, it's always life affirming to read how others started in this wonderful hobby. Once you have read the blog post you can go Alexander's own web page.

RADIO COMMUNICATIONS FOUNDATION

Registered Charity number 1100694

- The Foundation is a Registered Charity that exists to help young people get into radio and electronic engineering and to promote radio technology. It has helped fund the RSGB's educational outreach programme, provided finance for projects put forward by clubs or educational institutions, awarded scholarships to youngsters who demonstrate a commitment to radio and engineering and handled bequests for those who want their enthusiasm for radio remembered by future generations.
- What can you do? Your donation, regular payment or bequest in a Will is going to help the Charity continue its good work to benefit others in the hobby. Support us so that we can support amateur radio and everyone who is interested and active in the hobby.
- Please visit our website www.commsfoundation.org to find out all about us and follow the link to Donations.
